RESPONSE TO THE REVIEWERS' REPORTS

The last report by the reviewers in charge of evaluating the Center for the Study of Violence – CEPID-FAPESP reiterated some questions posed in the report presented after their site visit. It was our understanding that some of the questions had been answered in the last report as well as in the project for the next three years but since this was not the case, before we report the research results and the activities we carried out this past 14 months we take the opportunity to address the questions posed by the reviewers. This section is organized around 7 major issues raised by the reviewers: (1) the nature and utility of the databases, (2) the methodology, (3) the research capacity, (4) changes in research priorities/future projects, (5) publications, (6) governance and (7) and style of annual reports.

(1) The Databases

The main comments were:

- Doubts regarding the quality (reliability, validity and utility) of a human rights database, particularly regarding the use of newspapers as sources and the use of information on human rights abuses occurring outside the State of São Paulo,
- Doubts regarding the quality of the four databases and the quality of their sources,
- The recommendation that each database should be evaluated independently, in order to decide what to do next,

The Research Program at the Center encompasses three research projects, a fourth program to monitor Human Rights and a fifth project that aims to integrate research results and monitoring results in order to advance a theory of Human Rights as lived rights. Some of the research projects have developed databases to store the data collected, as means to improve data retrieval and treatment¹. Each of the research projects had a different research design, used different data collection techniques and treatment. A summary of the research design and results is presented in this report.

Monitoring Human Rights consists of two sets of activities: a) the collection of information on access to human rights this is done by gathering information on objective indicators of access to rights, i.e. how many people enjoy rights, and b) the collection of data on the violation of the right to physical integrity, a type of monitoring human rights known as monitoring through events. In short we use the two types of methodology to monitor human rights (Guzman, 2003):

1. events (or acts-based) methodology used to monitor “visible acts such as killings, arrests, torture and the like”²
2. Indicators-based methodology used to monitor social, economic, and cultural rights.

Monitoring events is usually done through the use of various sources: non-governmental organizations such as human rights groups, witnesses and newspapers. The indicators-based methodology relies on official data, on official statistics about the distribution of resources or that describe how citizens in a country live, work, reproduce and die. The project we call Cepid 1- Monitoring Human Rights uses both methodologies. Monitoring social, economic and cultural rights is done using official data provided by different government agencies at all levels of government: federal, state and local level. The data are available to all researchers through an intranet. Monitoring using the events methodology is done through the use of newspapers. Three types of events are collected in the newspapers: cases of lynching, executions and abusive use of force by the police forces.

Three databases were developed, one for each type of event or gross human right's violation considered, as they present specificities. Two of the three research projects have designed data bases to store the data collected in order to be able to process very large volumes of information. All databases are tools to allow researchers to retrieve, treat and to analyze massive amounts of information. The databases vary from project to project as the type of information, the sources, and the information stored vary. In the historical project a data base was designed to store information on historical sources: what legislation, minutes of parliamentary debates on public security, significant political speeches are available to researchers and where. The database here is a major source and short cut to other researchers interested in the development of public policies over public security issues. In the Cepid 3 project on judicial impunity, a data base was designed to store the data on thousands of criminal cases. The design of the data base was time consuming as was that of developing the manuals and the training of the staff to feed the data to the data base as well as the development of systems to control the quality of the input.

¹ The data bases are tools to organize large volumes of data. In the case of the historical project (Cepid 2) another use for the database is to grant external researchers access to the sources identified. In this case the database represents a short cut to other researchers.

In terms of the monitoring human rights violations through events, the use of newspapers is not new. Major data bases on human rights violations around the world use this source, albeit the problems of under-reporting of this source may have. This is the case of Huridocs (<http://www.huridocs.org>) that disseminate training on monitoring human rights through the events approach, Metagora (<http://www.metagora.org>) and the Benetech Human Rights Program (<http://www.benetech.org> and <http://www.hrdag.org>) The events based methodology tries to answer the question: Who did what to whom? (Spierer, 1993). Traditionally this is not done through official sources as states either responsible for the violations by omission or by commission. It is accepted in the field that information on gross human rights violations will not be readily accessible to researchers or to human rights defenders. This information has to be uncovered, mined inferred and multiple methods are being developed with the help of demographers, statisticians, physicians to be able to determine, with some degree of certainty, whether genocide or massive use of rape (as a political tool) have occurred. Despite the sources and the gaps it is expected that the information that results has enough credibility to be used as evidence in International Criminal Tribunals trying persons accused of committing crimes against humanity. In our case we are not monitoring violations taking place in the middle of civil war, or the consequence of a tyrannical government imposing its will against the people, but to violations that occur daily but in small dosages, and as result, in general, have little visibility. This invisibility is occasionally broken down by a case in which the number of victims escalate, giving the false impression that it is a rare phenomena. Most of the methodology to monitor gross human rights violations attempt to cope with reconstructing past events in order to produce evidence about what happened to the victims in order to punish the perpetrators or to dissuade them from further action. The case of Brazil and other Latin American countries is paradoxical because we monitor gross human rights violations occurring in a democratic regime, where the media enjoys freedom, where human rights organizations can act, denounce and monitor the state. It is a methodological challenge to monitor rights when the state omits information and when state agents are often involved in the commission of the violations.

When there is freedom of the press the media picks up cases made public by non-governmental organizations and disseminate the information. In fact the media is a key element in bringing to light gross human rights violations and this is true in most countries. In Brazil and in many countries human rights organizations are not widely disseminated they tend to concentrate in urban areas and in few cities. This lack of broad coverage of the territory is an obstacle for victims of violations and their relatives to seek the help and/or to denounce violations. The problem is made worse by the lack of information about where to find help even in large urban centers. So information from witnesses and from NGOs tends to follow the presence of a case in the media and not the other way around. The media will under represent the cases, but under representation is less of a problem since in Brazil there are, 20 years after the return to a civilian government an extraordinary number of cases of gross human rights violations. The problem with the media is that we cannot account for the bias. There is no way we can tell why some cases are reported and others are not.

It can be argued that the press does not have a commitment to report the truth and that it presents a distorted image of crime and violence fostering fear. Research in the United State, in the United Kingdom, in Holland and in Scandinavian countries has shown that the press over represents crimes against the life and in the United States this has been correlated with an over estimation by the public of the risk of victimization by certain types of offenses. Still our problem, in Brazil is the under representation of the phenomena and a potential bias of the press in selecting what to print that may give more salience to one or another type of violation, resulting in a distorted profile of what is really taking place out there. But if journalists are not concerned with scientific criteria of representation they are sensitive to human rights and violence, and the violation of human rights are important issues in their agenda. In fact it is difficult to name a major case of gross human rights violations in the last 25 years, in Brazil, that came into public knowledge through denunciations from witnesses, relatives and non-governmental organizations without the press being involved. In time some journalists have specialized in issues related to human rights, moreover when schools such as Columbia University developed special programs to train journalists how to report on human rights.

Thus it is legitimate to expect that gross human rights violations reported by the press are truthful and express to some degree the reality of human rights violation even if they may be under represented. That such violations will be under represented, regardless of the source one uses to monitor, is a fact accepted by all organizations that monitor human rights. If governments routinely fail to produce real crime statistics, because of under reporting by victims, because different agencies have different definitions of the phenomena affecting even the rate of crimes such as homicide, what to say of torture and police abusive use of lethal force, types of action governments are not so willing to inform?

In terms of gross human rights violations, if no source is free of problems, at least we must make sure that the information collected is carefully treated and stored and that we use standard formats to record the cases so that we can carry out analysis of the data, track the cases and exchange information. The limitations this methodology has of under reporting and an unknown bias can be reduced when coupled with the use of the indicators methodology: when we closely monitor the access to social, economic, cultural and political rights. Furthermore we are dealing with time series and a rather extensive one when we consider a social phenomenon: 25 years of data on press reports of gross human rights violations is rare. Only two other reported series are this long: one on Guatemala (Davenport and Ball, 2002) and the other one on police violence alone by CELS in Argentina.

The analysis of the data from the databases on gross human rights violations is being processed in a comprehensive way contextualizing the violations in terms of the places and periods in which they occurred. This means combining data from the database on access (or lack of) to social, economic and cultural rights with that from the historical project, which provide the different political and legal contexts.

The Center does its best to assure the quality of its databases, constructed in accordance with international standards for databases in the area of human rights. Doubts regarding this quality are legitimate, but, as the reviewers and committee suggest, the quality of the databases shall be and will be evaluated in national and international seminars on human rights data and data analysis.

- The recommendation that there must be more interactions with Centro de Estudos da Metrópole as both Centers was perceived to produce similar kind of Geographical Information Systems (GIS) information and maps.

It is true that both CEM- Centro de Estudos da Metrópole and NEV-CEPID/USP use GIS to present data to the public, still there are significant differences in how the raw data are treated in order to generate the images and in how they are used. We are progressing to work at a greater disaggregation of the territory and of the data and eventually to the contextualization of the violations in terms of the smallest territory- the street. Geographic accidents such as hills, and rivers and streams, the position of major roads, avenues and commercial streets as well as that of mass transport systems, favelas (slums), public housing states, police stations, schools and hospitals are other variables being included in the images for analysis. Cartograms are being used to explore relations and not as result of research.

The cartograms developed by the NEV are used to characterize the relations between the spatial distribution of violence and specific aspects of the territory. As such, the cartograms are tools to represent particular processes and to develop relational hypothesis. Several relations can be examined in a exploratory way and in a expedite way before we immerse in statistical analysis in this sense it is short cut to dismiss dead ends. This means that we have to have direct access to tools that are used daily, either as way to explore hunches, to illustrate an idea and or a presentation. This is done on demand and not subjected to wait.

The fact that we use secondary data on social and economic conditions, about some urban aspects and GIS does not mean that we duplicating work as these are basic elements for very diverse research concerns. Despite the differences obviously there can be joint seminars to exchange research results, methodologies and perhaps a joint publication with CEM.

(2) Methodology

The main comments were:

- Little discussion of research methods and their relation to research results,
- Doubts regarding the quality of methodology and data analysis

This information was present in the earlier reports. It was our understanding that the fourth report was to be a synthesis of the findings and that we need not need to describe the different research plans, samples, and data analysis but the results. This clearly was a misunderstanding and we are presenting, in the report for 2005 a summary of each project.

Nevertheless the major methodological challenges are the result of the fact that all three research projects have attempted to break new ground in terms of research design, in data collection and/or in the dissemination of results. All three were confronted, in some degree, with multiple difficulties that reflect not only gaps in how official data are collected and stored but also the level of accountability and openness to society scrutiny that governmental agencies have. So deeply entrenched are some resistances in the government to public access to data as to make certain types of research almost impossible. This in turn brings back the question of the limits of democratic consolidation in Brazil.

The historical project represents an innovation in Historical Sociology both in the theme that it pursued- the development of public security policies contextualized within the process of modernization of the country, as well as in the extension of the period covered from 1822 to 2000. The project on judicial impunity attempted to replicate a criminological research with a rigor to effectively measure impunity by following cases from the first police record to the sentencing. Previous attempts to measure impunity had resorted to aggregate data by identifying how many cases entered the system and how many were tried and deducing the rate of impunity from such numbers. The project on socially shared representations of justice, rights and punishment combined a cross sectional panel type longitudinal study to assess the impact of the exposure to violence on perceptions, values and attitudes with an in depth diagnosis of areas of the city with the highest rates of violence in an attempt to intervene in these areas both at the level of interpersonal relations as well as at the level of public policies.

As mentioned there are no official data series available to researchers that would allow us to design research projects with full proof schedules. Initial data collection plans and actual data collection bore almost no resemblance. Research staff were trained and sent to the field to collect data, and met with a number of unforeseen (and most of them unforeseeable) situations. Contingencies had to be continually dealt with, resulting in delays and re-organization of the schedules. Access to information from the police forces, from the judiciary, or about public policies was very difficult.

The State Secretariat for Public Security was particularly diffident to allow access to archival data but not only: this Secretariat would not disclose any policies it had to improve security in the areas of the study on socially shared representations. Once data was collected, storage of the data often demanded that special software programs be designed. Often the process of data collection itself became a research result: the hours researchers spent inside police districts allowed them opportunities for behavioral observation that enriched the understanding of the information they collected.

*Despite these difficulties, the Center does its best to assure the quality of its methodology and data analysis, the databases on gross human rights violations are developed in accordance with international standards for area of human rights. Doubts regarding this quality are legitimate, but, as the reviewers and committee suggest, the quality of the methodology and data analysis shall be and will be evaluated in national and international seminars. The Center is committed to improve the discussion of research methods and their relation to research results, and, given the importance of this discussion in the area of human rights, it is also committed to publish the results of these discussions not only in its annual reports but also chapters in books and articles in journals, and the e-journal Democracy and Human Rights.*

(3) research capacity

The main comments were:

- Research capacity should be improved, particularly in terms of methodology and data analysis,
- There should be independent evaluation of the center's research.

The Center has successfully maintained a continuous effort to recruit the best researchers in the area of human rights, violence and democracy and to establish good working relationships with foreign researchers. We can learn a lot from visiting researchers and have welcomed them in the past and will continue to do so, especially if we can develop collaborative research projects because this is the most efficient way for us to receive technologies and to adapt to our needs. Still there are very few Centers within Universities that work as interdisciplinary as we do, and again this can be a problem because the integration of work from various fields is still work in progress.

Our researchers are present in academic debate in multiple fields: that of historical sociology, criminology, political science, violence, epidemiological study of violence, and democratization. Researchers are involved in multiple activities in the field of human rights, such as the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights of the Organization of American States (OAS), the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, the United Nations Subcommission for the Promotion and the Protection of Human Rights, the International Advisory Group of the International Committee of the Red Cross, ICRC. One of our members is the Independent Expert of the United Nations Secretary General on Violence Against Children and another member of the Editorial Board of that study. Our colleagues have reported on human rights violations in various countries most recently on violations against youth in Central America and the Caribbean. We collaborate closely with the World Health Organization Department of Injuries and Violence Prevention and were officially nominated as a WHO Collaborating Center in this field. In this position we work closely with the Pan American Health Organization, with the Centers for Disease Control (Violence Prevention Department) with Emory University, with the London School of Tropical Medicine and Hygiene amongst others. We have helped to develop tools to identify and assess violence prevention initiatives, to measure the risks that urbanization present to urban youth (Department of Mental Health and Substance Abuse). We are also part of a network of researchers working in the Millenium project funded by the CNPq in the field of post-traumatic stress disorder as result of exposure to violence at the São Paulo Federal School of Medicine and together with the United Nations Development Program we are in the process of identifying the major violence prevention initiatives in Brazil.

Final data analysis has been delayed in some projects not due to lack of trained personnel, but because the actual data collection took much longer, than originally scheduled, or else only partial analysis could be carried out. This was the case in the project on socially shared representation as third wave of data collection was expected and this is now postponed to 2007.

The number of publications grew in the last years as the data became available as can be seen in the 3rd report to Fapesp (2003-2004). Also the Center's has regularly invited foreign researchers to present and discuss research projects and results, to conduct extensive seminars and courses.

Peer reviewers do independent evaluations of the Center's research systematically when we publish. Our work is also reviewed when research assistant receive scholarships and when they present their research reports at national meetings (such as the Brazilian Society for the Advancement of Science), or when we present research results at national and international seminars conferences, congresses, and working groups. Also when government and non-governmental organizations invite the Center to provide advice on policies and programs and when we disseminate our work through the media.

Our researchers are also individually evaluated by other funding agencies such as CAPES and CNPq and by the academic community in the Committees and Boards in which they represent us. Data collected in our projects were used for Master's dissertations and for PhDs (in Brazil and in the USA); again this means that external experts evaluated our work. The same is true for undergraduate and graduated students on scholarships. Since we believe there is always room for improvement we would like to formally request that FAPESP sponsor the evaluation of our three research projects and our human rights database.

(4) changes in research priorities/future projects

The main comments were:

- Little vision of the Center's future. Need to rationalize efforts and select most promising areas of research: few resources and many activities,
- No information on changes in research plans,
- Need to incorporate recommendations of the visiting committee and redefine original research plans,

- Priorities seem to be integrating and analyzing research projects, data sets and findings, continuing to monitor human rights violations in the State of São Paulo, and verifying changes and continuities in the visions and attitudes of professionals working in the public security and criminal justice system regarding human rights, which are in accordance with the committee's recommendation. However, there is very little description of future research projects, which can be associated of insufficient evaluation of on-going research projects.

The new project represents an effort to meet the recommendations made by the evaluation committee as well as those made by FAPESP. The number of projects is reduced; there is more integration between the staff, more data sharing between the researchers and more emphasis on analysis, theoretical seminars and in the development of means to disseminate results to a broader audience.

*One of the goals of the new project is to enhance exchanges with Latin American groups and with South Africa as they present multiple similarities to our case. The Center planned three international seminars for next project. The first one should take place in the first year of the second project and the other in the second year. The first Seminar will be about The Methodological Challenges of Monitoring Human Rights, the second on Democracy and Human Rights in a Comparative Perspective and the third to submit the results of the integrated analysis to external evaluators.*

Another activity will be to produce papers adapted to the guidelines of a number of journals, that relate closely to our issues: Democratization, International Studies Quarterly, Journal of Peace Research, Journal of Conflict Resolution, International Affairs, Law and Society Review, Human Rights Quarterly, Health and Human Rights, Journal of Latin American Studies, besides the development of e.journal on human rights and democracy. There are other complementary fields such as public health, social psychology and medicine.

(5) publications

The main comments are:

- Variable and sometimes unimpressive quality of publications; doubts regarding the value of publications due to doubts in the quality of research, methodology and data sets,
- Limited publication in international journals, in English, French and Spanish,
- Limited publication in social science journals,
- Publications not clearly related to research projects and progress in terms of research results,
- List of publications partial and without a discrimination of their value in terms of content and impact.

*Contrary to the perception expressed above, most of our publications are in the field of social sciences and or human rights. We have published in the Brazilian social science periodicals such as Revista Dados, Revista Brasileira de Ciências Sociais, Sociologias, São Paulo em Perspectiva, Lua Nova, Tempo Social – Revista de Sociologia da USP, Revista de Sociologia e Política. Recently we have published a number of papers in Culture & Conflicts. It is also necessary to keep in mind that human rights issues cut across disciplines and that periodicals related to Law, Medicine, Public Health, Communications, Architecture and Urban Studies and Economy can be adequate vehicles for our papers. This cross cutting aspect of human rights is salient in the periodical: Human Rights and Health.

Below is a table of publications in the period: 2000-2005.

PUBLICATIONS (2000-2005)
	INTERNATIONAL			NACIONAL			TOTAL
	A	B	C	A	B	C
Periodicals	4	8	5	11	15	7	50

TOTAL		44			110		160

In the period the Center produced 160 papers: 53.12% are papers published in periodicals, books and book chapters. The papers published in periodicals according to the system QUALIS, a methodology to assess impact developed by the Coordenação de Aperfeiçoamento de Pessoal do Ensino Superior – CAPES, the federal agency in charge of supervising and evaluating post graduated courses in Brazil. Categories A, B and C correspond to JCR impact level. According to this classification 34% of the papers were published in international periodicals mostly with an average impact. Roughly one third of the papers were published in a category A periodical (international and national).

On average we published 3 papers a year. If only the papers and book chapters are considered, the yearly average was 17. This is well above the standards of post graduated courses with the highest ratings (rate 6 or 7) in the last national evaluation (2004) by CAPES.

We fully agree with the need to publish more extensively abroad, still we have to accept that in order to routinely publish in the most prestigious periodicals the staff needs to have the time and energy to prepare drafts that conform to the different rules of each publisher: we would have to be pro-active. It is also important to remember that our first audience is domestic: the Center from its foundation sought to play a role in the definition of public policies in terms of human rights and in the provision of public security with respect for democratic Rule of Law. It has done so through research and through the dissemination of research information to civil society and to the public through the media.

Having a small staff and having to respond to several external demands as well as to the daily ones of supervising research, dissemination and education, reviewing, taking part in committees and boards and so on, in the end we tend to respond to calls and formal invitations to publish, and needless to say, manage to do so under much stress. We respond to opportunities rather than actively go out to find places to publish in. Another obstacle to publish abroad is language: very few among us feel confident enough to write a paper in another language and submit it for publication without involving a professional translator. This entails prohibiting costs, at least for our pay scales. On average to translate a paper from Portuguese into French or Spanish the cost will be between US $ 1,300 to 2,000. This is yet another reason why being pro-active in searching for higher profile periodicals is not very attractive. When time is short and there are multiple demands on your time you tend to respond to what is more immediate and more likely to provide returns. In any event the time constraint certainly is the key element that has prevented us from being more aggressive in publishing abroad.

(6) governance

The main comments were:

- Need more effective system of adapting to future challenges,
- Need of a decision-making body for approving projects and allocating funds,
- Management should include more members of the next generation of researchers.

NEV USP has been an official Centre for the Support of Research of the University of São Paulo since September 1990. It is recognized in Brazil and abroad. Our principal researchers are present in the Social Sciences Citation Index and in Scholar Google (report appended) besides being a Collaborating Centre to WHO Department of Injuries and Violence Prevention and developing joint work with UNDP.

Researchers at the NEV-CEPID/USP follow human rights and public security policies as well as broader social and political changes that affect crime and gross human rights violations and their impact on citizen's values, beliefs and attitudes.

In 2005 NEV-CEPID/USP re-structured the composition of its Deliberative Council enlarging its composition in terms of the breadth of fields of knowledge as well as of representation of civil society. Faculty members from the Law School, from the School of Architecture and Urban Studies, School of Philosophy, Languages and Social Sciences, School of Medicine, University of Campinas and the Catholic University, also a representative of the Instituto São Paulo contra a Violência. The role of the Council is to supervise the quality and relevance of our research, educational activities and dissemination, overseeing our research reports and papers and new projects.

We acknowledge that more integration between the different research projects is needed. Still when we consider the actual size of our staff, the fact that some work part time, and the results achieved in terms of research, educational activities and dissemination the end result is substantial although it did demand a lot of commitment from the staff. The project for the next three years will allow more results with less stress from the staff as the activities are more concentrated.

The future of the Center depends on the short and medium range on the fulfillment of three demands: a) the maintenance of high quality research, education and dissemination, b) the renewal of its leadership and c) more international ties. In terms of the next five years we expect that the Center will acquire a formal institutional framework similar to that of the Institute for Brazilian Studies with staff formally connected to the University.

The management of the Center is including the younger generation of researchers but further incentives for the permanence of younger researchers depends on the formal inclusion of the Center within the institutional framework of the University with the ability to hire researchers and to provide for a career structure. The staff at the Center has four USP Professors, three are active in the career and one is retired, and one researcher at the level of university technician. Five other researchers with Ph.D and 6 with Masters' degrees, have no formal connections with the university.

(7) annual reports

The main comments were:

- Reports should be succinct and analytic and include short initial summary.
- Reports should focus on goals, designs and outputs of research projects.

We agree with the comments, but the Center tried to produce annual reports in accordance with the guidelines made by FAPESP. The guidelines resulted in a rather formal structure that made no room for detailing some methodological issues.

Dear Dr Cardia,

Enclosed please find a copy of the TEACH-VIP users' manual which contains the TEACH-VIP CD-ROM attached to the inside of the rear cover page.

Following the development of the materials during two years, the curriculum was pilot tested successfully in 2004-5. This phase involved a broad range of settings with a wide range of training audiences. In general the feed-back has been very positive. As a result this unique training material is now available for global distribution. I would like to take this opportunity to thank you for your contribution to its development. You'll be pleased to know that hundreds of copies have been requested from all over the world well in advance of TEACH-VIP's official release.

Over the coming years we will develop further our efforts in capacity building. This will include efforts to broaden access to TEACH-VIP through online training sessions, translation into the other 5 official UN languages, active dissemination via WHO networks and other developments which will probably include a global mentoring programme. Please feel welcome to contact me or Dr David Meddings (meddingsd@who.int) should you have any comments, or questions related to TEACH-VIP or upcoming initiatives.

Thank you once more for helping develop capacity in the area of injury prevention and control globally. We hope our combined efforts will ultimately contribute to strengthening the response to what is one of the major public health problems in many countries.

Prezada Dra. Cardia:

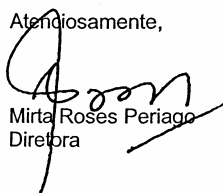

Tenho a honra de informá-la que, após realizar as consultas de praxe com o Governo do seu país, a Organização Mundial da Saúde (OMS) e a Organização Pan-Americana da Saúde (OPAS) designaram a Universidade de São Paulo, como Centro Colaborador da OPAS/OMS para Pesquisa sobre Prevenção da Violência. Como anteriormente acordado, V. S. atuará como Diretora do Centro. Em anexo, encontram-se os termos de referência. Eventualmente, se ocorrerem alterações que venham afetar este acordo, agradeço se V. S. possa informar-me imediatamente.

A designação será válida por um período de quatro anos (2005-2009) a contar da data indicada nesta carta. A menos que a redesignação seja oficialmente renovada e notificada antes de agosto de 2009, a designação como Centro Colaborador da OPAS/OMS cessará automaticamente. Neste sentido, convido V.S. a entrar em contato com a Unidade de Avaliação e Gestão de Riscos da OPAS com a qual normalmente este Centro colabora, para discutir a eventual redesignação a ser realizada pelo menos seis meses antes da data de término da presente designação. Não obstante, qualquer uma das partes (entidades) poderá revogar a designação em qualquer momento durante o período de vigência desta designação, mediante notificação da sua intenção com antecedência de três meses.

A título informativo, lhe chegará oportunamente uma cópia da lista oficial de Centros Colaboradores da OPAS/OMS que trabalham nesta área do conhecimento. Anexamos parte do Manual da OMS relativa ao uso do emblema da organização para utilização em correspondências. Esse logotipo somente poderá ser utilizado pelo Centro durante o período em que sua organização é reconhecida como Centro Colaborador da OPAS/OMS.

Antecipando um profícuo trabalho de cooperação, subscrevo-me.

Atenciosamente,

Mirta Roses Periago
Diretora

USE OF WHO'S NAME, EMBLEM AND FLAG

(by WHO Collaborating Centres)

A WHO collaborating centre may use the name "WHO" or "World Health Organization" and the WHO emblem in its letterhead under the conditions set forth below.

- (1) The WHO name and emblem are to be used solely for correspondence related to the institution's activities as a collaborating centre.
- (2) If the term "WHO" or "World Health Organization" is used in the letterhead, the characters of these terms should be of the same size as those for the title of the centre. The title of the centre is "WHO Collaborating Centre" followed by a concise indication of the sphere of activity covered by the centre, e.g. "WHO Collaborating Centre for research on", "for reference on", "for standardization of procedures on".
- (3) If the language used by the centre for its letterhead is a language other than the official languages of the World Health Assembly (Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish) or other languages used officially by regional offices, then one of the latter should also be included.
- (4) Any letterhead using WHO's name should include the title under which the institution has been designated, as indicated in the official letter of designation.
- (5) The size of the WHO emblem and the characters of the title of the centre should be smaller than the size of the characters of the name of the institute.

All other uses of WHO's name and emblem require the Director-General's prior approval.

A WHO flag can be obtained upon request for use by the centre on certain occasions - and not on a permanent basis - (e.g. on World Health Day, 7 April; on the occasion of any official event related in some way to the World Health Organization) and provided it is displayed in conformity with the WHO Flag Code and Regulations (sent at the same time as the flag).

Main Activities in the period: October 2004 – December 2005

Research Activities

In this period we have been engaged in various data analysis, in the writing of papers and reports for publication:

1-“Third National Report on Human Rights: 2003-2005”.

This report covers the 27 states and the federal government. 3- Violence, Criminal Justice and Impunity. Final Research Report. NEV: CEPID/USP, 85p. (forthcoming next 2006).

4-“ Homicides of youth in Brazil from 1980-2002”

This report develops an analysis of mortality data from the Ministry of Health and data from the gross human rights violations data bases on lynching, executions and killings by the police of youth between 0 and 19 years of age. This analysis covers the country, all 27 states and state capitals. The printing of this report is financed by the National Secretariat for Human Rights.

5- Fire arms and inequality in Brazil , 2000

A statistical analysis of the association between homicide by fire arms and inequality , by each state of the federation, state capitals and within the city of São Paulo, for each census district, using data on homicide from the Ministry of Health and the social and economic indicators from the data base on secondary data (NEV-intranet), illustrated with cartograms.

6- The police that society wants Data from the subproject on the police that society wants was made available to a number of police researchers in Brazil for re-analysis and the results have been compiled in the last book(12th) on the “Police and Society” series published by the NEV with EDUSP: "A polícia que a sociedade deseja" to be printed by Edusp.

7- Violence in schools: myths and facts.

The experience of researching and attempting to intervene in public schools in three areas with high rates of violence resulted in a book for teachers and parents about school violence and how to prevent it- This book was presented to a panel of judges at the Imprensa Oficial do Estado for publishing and was selected and is now being edited for printing.

8- PNUD [UNDP] Relatório de Desenvolvimento Humano,. Racismo, pobreza e violência [Human Development Report,. Racism, poverty and violence] Brasília, PNUD, 2005 .Data from the household surveys on victimization and perceptions of justice, violence, expectations of punishment and human rights were analyzed by Professor Sérgio Adorno for this important UNDP publication on race, poverty and violence.

Dissemination of activities

The activities of dissemination are fully described in the tables appended.

Two major activities to disseminate our work were: an international seminar on Democracy and Inequality sponsored by UNDP and the website to disseminate information on rights to citizens - NEV cidadão. A third activity is the production of a book series on Human Rights that starts with the translation of five titles.

International Seminar on Democracy in Latin America towards a citizen's democracy

This international conference, held in the USP campus, was sponsored by UNDP, Brazil in cooperation with NEV and the University of Sao Paulo, on 6 and 7 December 2004 brought together a number of political scientists, economists, historians, sociologists and journalists from several research centers in Brazil and Latin America to discuss the state of democracy in Latin America in view of the growth of inequality, in particular the results of UNDP report Democracy in Latin America.

Democracy and inequality was debated by Manuel Garretón (from PRODDAL-Program for the Development of Democracy in Latin America), Leonardo Avritzer (Federal University of Minas Gerais) and Marcelo Paixão (Federal University of Rio de Janeiro);

Politics, Democracy and Political Science in Latin America-PRODDAL's Contribution was debated by: Edelberto Torres (PRODDAL), Fabiano Santos (IUPERJ) and Cláudio Couto (Catholic University of São Paulo)

Agenda for political reform in Latin America was debated by: Maria Hermínia Tavares de Almeida (USP) Carlos Ranulfo (Federal University of Minas Gerais) and Octávio Amorim (Fundação Getúlio Vargas, Rio de Janeiro)

Empirical research in Political Science - The Challenge of Latin América was debated by: Fernando Limongi (CEBRAP), Geraldo Munk (PRODDAL) and Fábio Wanderley Reis (Federal University of Minas Gerais)

Inequality as a threat to democracy was debated by: Fátima Anastasia (Federal University of Minas Gerais), Renato Boschi (UNICAMP) and Luciana Jaccoud (IPEA).

How to face inequality? Was debated by Marcus Melo (UPFE), Fernando Calderón (PRODDAL) and José Augusto Lindgren Alves (CERD-ONU)

Democracy, participation and public opinion was debated by: Elisa Reis (Federal University of Rio de Janeiro), Eliane Cantanhêde (Folha de S. Paulo) and Rodolfo Mariani (PRODDAL)

Will universal access to human rights reduce inequality? Debated by Paulo Sérgio Pinheiro (Nev-USP), Graça Rua (University of Brasília) and Nancy Cardia (NEV-USP).

WebSite NEV-Cidadão

Our attempt to implement conflict negotiation/mediation and local security contracts in the three areas with high rates of violence in the city taught us that a number of violent offenses were the result of unresolved conflicts over scarce public goods, lack of access to information about how to reduce the gap in rights played an important role in such conflicts. An analysis of the means to inform the population about their rights used by formal entities such as human rights' commissions, secretariats or NGO's, revealed that they failed to reach the people, either because the means used (books, formal publications) were out of reach (physically) or because the language used was not adequate to the audience.

We decided to experiment developing a website to contain useful information about key rights: education and health were the first topics, later on expanded to security, employment, social security, culture and leisure, consumer rights, documents. This site is hosted at FAPESP's incubadora project. To inform the population about the site we started to prepare local youth to tape brief messages about rights to be disseminated in local community radio stations. This work demanded we prepare youth to read and to speak clearly. This project is now being extended to the East part of the city to similar communities. We must intensify the dissemination of information about the site. The results up to now are very promising: the site is the most visited one in FAPESP's incubadora with 93242 visitors a week. This project was chosen by FAPESP to be presented at the workshop TIDIA as a model project. <http://www.guiadosdireitos.org.br>

More recently FAPESP is being able to track visitors and we discovered that, though most visitors still reach the site through Google, the themes they use to arrive at the site confirms they are the audience we want to reach: documents to prove poverty, popular chemist (medication at low cost), schools, labor rights.

In October 2005, at the time of the national referendum on whether the sale of fire arms should be prohibited, the site was visited by over 160.000 visitors a week.

Another key activity is the production of a book series on Human Rights to complement the series on Police and Society. Five titles have been selected for translation and are in the process of translation and revision. They will be published and distributed by EDUSP. The series is being financed by the National Secretariat for Human Rights. The titles of the series are:

- Devine, Carol,
Human rights: the essential reader, Oryx Press, 1999
- Andreopoulos, George and Claude, Richard Pierre,
Human Rights Education for the Twenty First Century, University of Pennsylvania Press, 1997
- Tobin, J.
Guide to Human Rights Research, Harvard Law School , 1994
- Ishay, Micheline, R., Editor,
The Human Rights Reader, Major Political Essays, Speeches and Documents; Routledge. 1997

- Jelin, Elizabeth & Hershenberg, Eric (eds),
Constructing Democracy: Human Rights, citizenship and society in Latin America.
Westview Press,1997

Other dissemination activities:

Wânia Izumino

- Consultancy to develop national standards for Women Police Stations. For the Secretariat of Public Policies, Women Secretariat Presidency of the Republic, Federal government.
- Development of a handbook on “Effective responses to violence against women” to be used in the training of police officers for the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, (UNODC) Criminal Justice Reform Unit, Rule of Law Section, Vienna-Austria.

Nancy Cardia

- Advanced lectures on youth violence for the TEACH VIP (teach violence prevention) program of the Department of Injuries and Violence Prevention-WHO, Geneva
- A review of the state of the art in the literature on evidence based youth violence prevention initiatives that promote healthy youth development. For the Andean Coalition on for the Prevention of Youth Violence, Pan American Health Organization and GTZ.

Educational Activities

Two major educational activities are in course:

I

The 1st Course on Organizational Management in Public Security and Criminal Justice, September 27, 2005 – 21 February, 2006.

Scheduled activities: Lectures, debates, group exercises, interactive web-site.
<http://www.nev.vanzolini-ead.org.br>.

Duration: 180 hours.

Number of students: 36 students: judges (6), public prosecutors (10), heads of police precinct (10), and officers of the Military Police (10).

This is the first course of its kind in Brazil. Members of the criminal justice system have never had access to training in management. Part of the poor performance of the system is ascribed to the precarious management of human and material resources resulting in numerous strikes, scandals in terms of managing funds and in low controls over corruption. It is also the first time in University that a number of different Institutions like the School of Business Administration joins forces with the Engineering School and Fundação Getúlio Vargas to provide graduate training to judges, police officers and public prosecutors. It is also the first time that members of the criminal justice system work together in a neutral setting in a collaborative way.

In this course we are making intensive use of the book series organized by NEV/USP: Police and Society.
